Galatia was an ancient area in the highlands of central Anatolia, roughly corresponding to the provinces of Ankara and Eskişehir, in modern Turkey. Galatia was named after the Gauls from Thrace, who settled here and became its ruling caste in the 3rd century BC, following the Gallic invasion of the Balkans in 279 BC. It has been called the "Gallia" of the East: Roman writers calling its inhabitants Galli.

Inner Anatolia, the heartland of modern Turkey, is divided into two parts. To the east lies the Anatolian steppe, the vast, monotonous plains of Galatia, Lycaonia, and Cappadocia. The western part of the steppe was known in antiquity simply as the Axylon, the 'treeless country', well-suited to large-scale stock-rearing.

Two relationships dominated every aspect of Asia Minor's history throughout the period: that of the people to the land and that of men to the gods. An enormous quantity of information derived from written sources, archaeological remains, inscriptions, and coins make it possible to explore these relationships at a level of detail which is hardly possible for any other part of the ancient world.
